

Dear Dr. Capps,

I wanted to give you something, to somehow thank you for the time and part of you it took to put together this class. For a class which held 900 people, it was anything but impersonal. I had so many questions about Vietnam, not historical facts, but what happened to it, and where did it go, where did all the people from it go. This class really answered these questions for me and gave me a new outlook on other things, not just in Vietnam. I'm graduating this year and somehow I feel my future is mapped out for, as John Wheeler said, everything means something. The class brought a great deal of new perspectives to me. I hope you are ok, through the class itself plus all the outside work I'm sure you are mentally: physically exhausted.

I couldn't leave this quarter without letting you know these things. The war is unfinished and questions are still unanswered, but with this experience it is all starting to come together.

Thank you,

Jennifer Greene
